Emily noted that companies and institutions should anticipate wide-ranging congressional scrutiny if Democrats retake the majority, and advised organizations to use their remaining time before the election to prepare for that exposure.

As Co-Chair of the firm's Congressional Investigations Practice and Government Controversies and Public Policy Litigation Practice, Emily guides companies and institutions through congressional inquiries and public hearings. A former Associate Deputy Attorney General at the US Department of Justice and Associate White House Counsel, she now leads internal investigations and prepares senior executives to testify before Congress. She is recognized by Chambers USA as a leading lawyer nationwide for Congressional Investigations.
