Overview

As a Student Director in Yale Law School's Supreme Court Advocacy Clinic, Grace gained experience in Supreme Court and appellate advocacy, drafting briefs in high-stakes matters involving complex constitutional and administrative law issues. She helped lead a team of students that secured a unanimous decision in favor of the Clinic's client in an administrative law case before the Supreme Court.

Before joining the firm, Grace completed judicial clerkships at the federal appellate and district court levels, where she analyzed complex legal issues and assisting with appellate and trial-level litigation.
