Overview

Spencer Ross Feinstein received his JD from the University of California, Berkeley School of Law, where he served as a supervising editor of the California Law Review and a staff editor of the Ecology Law Quarterly. He also participated in the Samuelson Law, Technology, and Public Policy Clinic, working on issues at the intersection of copyright and AI.

Spencer devoted much of his time at Berkeley to pro bono work, co-founding and co-leading Freedom of Information Advocates, a student-led project focused on First Amendment issues. He also performed research on state net crediting practices for another student-led project focused on sustainable energy issues. Spencer externed for the Honorable Christina A. Snyder of the US District Court for the Central District of California and, as a summer associate at Jenner, drafted research memos and summarized discovery orders in key copyright and AI cases. Before law school, he worked as a case clerk at another AmLaw 100 firm and as a research assistant to a bestselling author.
