Overview

Amy Gallegos represents companies and individuals in high-stakes commercial litigation. Her clients span a broad range of industries including energy, technology, food and beverage, financial services, pharmaceuticals and media and entertainment.

Amy's practice focuses on antitrust litigation, trade secret litigation, complex business disputes, consumer fraud and class action defense. She has litigated in state and federal courts across the United States, has handled and won multiple appeals, and has extensive experience in multidistrict litigation. Amy has also successfully represented clients in connection with government investigations. She is known for her ability to develop big-picture solutions for clients with complicated legal problems.

Amy also has a history of success in the intellectual property space representing content owners alleging copyright infringement related to new technologies and advanced media. Amy is well-versed in Internet law and licensing issues affecting the broadcast television industry. She was previously recognized in Variety's "Legal Impact Report," a listing of the top lawyers in the entertainment industry and in the Los Angeles Daily Journal's list of the state's "Top Intellectual Property Litigators."

Successful advocacy requires a customized approach that centers on the client's goals. It also requires a clear endgame. Never go into litigation without knowing how you want it to end and having a plan to get there.”
