Overview

Being ready before a counterparty default occurs means more paths to a higher recovery, while waiting and reacting to a default can eliminate many of those recovery paths altogether. Marc Hankin helps clients assess their situation and ensure they are well-positioned in advance of counterparty default to obtain the best possible outcomes. Marc helps financial institutions, funds, and large corporations protect their interests and maximize recoveries.

Numerous companies and entire industries are undergoing significant disruption due to technological change, supply chain issues, or macro-economic developments like inflation. Marc advises clients across a range of industries facing such disruption and confronting the increased risk of counterparty default. He also represents parties involved in structured finance products.

Marc works closely with litigators to develop and implement strategies that enhance client recovery or limit exposure and liability. He offers his clients nearly three decades of experience working in distressed situations both in the US and Asia. One of the very few bankruptcy attorneys with substantial experience in monitorships, Marc also counsels on compliance procedures and structures, and has experience using large data sets to identify compliance issues at the earliest opportunity.

Oftentimes, success in a distressed situation results from working within the box. The key is understanding the dimensions of the box, and establishing the client's position within it, before the default occurs”
