Overview

Karam Jardaneh assists corporate, institutional, and individual clients on a variety of white-collar crime matters. Karam helps clients navigate complex anti-bribery and corruption, anti-money laundering, and sanctions-related issues. She also guides clients in relation to the continuously evolving laws relating to human rights and ESG more generally.

Karam plays a key role in guiding clients through sensitive and business-critical challenges such as internal investigations and external investigations conducted by government enforcement agencies in relation to potential wrongdoing by companies and their employees. She also works with clients on implementing policies and procedures to mitigate against the risks of wrongdoing in the future.

While Karam’s practice is broad and has involved global companies around the world, she is an Arabic speaker and has been involved in a number of matters relating to the Middle East.
