Overview

A skilled advocate for clients seeking to shape the regulatory landscape, Camillie draws on her experience in matters across the communications field to develop practical solutions that further her clients' goals. With a deep understanding of the communications and technology industries, Camillie partners with her clients to secure what amounts to billions of dollars in licenses and authorizations to deliver advanced, next-generation products and services across the United States and around the world. Among other things, Camillie advises companies seeking to offer innovative products and services on highly technical and complex proceedings involving the satellite and space industries, including novel space safety and sustainability issues.

Camillie advises wireline and wireless clients operating in the communications and technology space on issues at the intersection of law, innovation, regulation, and policy. She advocates for clients in FCC rulemaking, enforcement, and other regulatory proceedings and represents them in various transactional matters. Clients rely on her sage advice on spectrum policy, licensing, and allocation proceedings, as well as her forward-thinking counsel on product design and compliance, including in connection with emerging technologies and services. Camillie also counsels clients on universal service matters, including program participation.

I partner with my clients to help them accomplish their goals within the legal, regulatory, and policy frameworks impacting their industry.”
