Overview

Andrew Plague advises clients at the intersection of law and public policy. His practice focuses on helping companies, nonprofit organizations, and individuals navigate high-stakes challenges—ranging from congressional and state attorneys general investigations to internal investigations and foreign legislative inquiries. Andrew works closely with clients facing public policy scrutiny, internal governance challenges, and evolving regulatory environments, working to mitigate legal exposure and safeguard reputational interests.

Before rejoining Jenner & Block in 2025, Andrew served in the Biden White House as a Senior Associate Staff Secretary. In this role, he traveled with the President and was a trusted member of the team responsible for managing the flow of written briefing materials to the President and coordinating presidential decision-making processes.
