Overview

Roger Sherman, former FCC Wireless Bureau Chief, Chief Democratic Counsel of the Energy and Commerce Committee, Staff Director and Chief Counsel of the Subcommittee on Communications and Technology and Deputy Chief Counsel of the House Oversight Committee, is considered a premier strategist on wireless regulatory and legislative issues.

Roger possesses a unique perspective and invaluable insights on regulatory and legislative matters drawing on his decades of experience on Capitol Hill, at the FCC, at a nationwide wireless company, and in law firms.

Roger collaborates with a range of clients—from Fortune 50 companies to startups and investors—preparing them to engage strategically with government entities and key policymakers at the FCC and in Congress. He has particular expertise with matters that involve both legislative and regulatory components and is adept at helping clients understand the connection between federal policy and business objectives.

I partner with communications and technology-sector clients to develop strategies that drive forward their business objectives.”
