Over the course of the last week, states and municipalities across the United States have implemented numerous orders restricting the operations of “nonessential” businesses in an effort to curb the spread of COVID-19 (the Essential Business Orders). Given the disparate approaches across various jurisdictions, businesses are being forced to navigate a patchwork of directives impacting whether they are considered “essential”—and therefore may continue in-person operations—or not.

To help our clients better navigate these varying directives, we have compiled two Essential Business Orders trackers providing key information on the Orders issued by states and large urban areas. These trackers will be updated regularly as new Orders are issued.
