

“OSHA May Be Closer to Getting COVID-19 Regs on Track,” Law360

Publications

March 23, 2021

In her column, Jenner & Block Partner Gabrielle Sigel explains that President Biden, on his first full day in office, signed an executive order on protecting worker health and safety. The order required the Occupational Safety and Health Administration to consider whether any emergency temporary standards on COVID-19 are necessary and, if so, to issue those standards by March 15. However, that date “came and went” with no standards. Ms. Sigel delves into the questions presented, including why OSHA didn’t act and what emergency standards might be on the horizon.

Related Capabilities

ESG: Environmental, Social, and Governance

Related Locations

Chicago

© 2026 Jenner & Block LLP. Attorney Advertising. Jenner & Block LLP is an Illinois Limited Liability Partnership including professional corporations. This publication, presentation, or event is not intended to provide legal advice but to provide information on legal matters and/or firm news of interest to our clients and colleagues. Readers or attendees should seek specific legal advice before taking any action with respect to matters mentioned in this publication or at this event. The attorney responsible for this communication is Brent E. Kidwell, Jenner & Block LLP, 353 N. Clark Street, Chicago, IL 60654-3456. Prior results do not guarantee a similar outcome. Jenner & Block London LLP, an affiliate of Jenner & Block LLP, is a limited liability partnership established under the laws of the State of Delaware, USA and is authorised and regulated by the Solicitors Regulation Authority with SRA number 615729. Information regarding the data we collect and the rights you have over your data can be found in our Privacy Notice. For further inquiries, please contact dataprotection@jenner.com.

