Overview

Isabel Farhi’s practice centers on content, media, and entertainment matters, with a particular focus on the interplay between the First Amendment, copyright, and technology. Among other things, she advises technology companies on matters ranging from the content risks in emerging technologies, including Section 230 issues, to legislative strategy. In addition to Isabel’s work in the technology industry, she litigates copyright and trademark disputes on behalf of her clients.

On top of her content, media, and entertainment work, Isabel maintains an active pro bono practice that includes, among other things, representing an individual in an excessive force in arrest case, advising an independent artist on copyright risk, and advising a performing arts organization with respect to intellectual property issues.
