Overview

Eric Wolff helps clients with all aspects of preparing for litigation, including drafting motions and discovery responses, performing legal research, and reviewing documents. He has worked with clients in the media, banking, and retail industries and has worked on matters involving antitrust, data privacy, and class actions.

Eric performs key roles in discovery projects. He has, for example, led a small team that prepared a subset of documents for production. Eric also has an active pro bono practice focused on prisoners' rights and represents the Los Angeles office on the firm's Associates Committee. In law school, he received the James G. Holbrook Award for the most significant contribution to the Southern California Law Review as a staff member. Eric externed for Justice Ming W. Chin of the California Supreme Court. Prior to law school, he worked as a musician and music teacher.
