Overview

Ben Hand represents clients navigating the intersection of regulation, government investigations, and high-stakes trial and appellate litigation, often involving challenging issues of statutory, constitutional, and administrative law. He also has experience counseling clients on pending legislation and regulations and preparing clients to appear before Congress.

Ben leverages his experience as a judicial clerk on the Ninth Circuit and Northern District of California to craft compelling arguments for his clients on novel issues of law and policy. Prior to joining the firm, he worked as an associate at another international law firm in San Francisco.
