

Partner Emily Loeb Discusses Expansion of Firm's Congressional Investigations Practice

News

December 1, 2022

Partner Emily Loeb was featured in Law 360's article about Jenner & Block's recent expansion of the Congressional Investigation Practice. The article discussed the firm's recent hires, strategic focus on congressional investigations, how the space has changed overtime, and how the previous election could change the current landscape.

"We've been quite intentional here at Jenner to build a team that's uniquely positioned to serve clients to advise on these high-stakes matters that are really at the intersection of law, policy, government and media scrutiny," said Emily. Our "lawyers have seen different types of congressional investigations proceed from various vantage points. They've seen these issues as congressional staff, in the federal government, as state officials and, of course, in high-profile congressional investigations [in] private practice. I really believe that this experience allows us to better prepare witnesses and to see around corners to help our clients devise a holistic strategy."

Emily is chair of the Congressional Investigations Practice and a co-chair of the Government Controversies and Public Policy Litigation Practice. Before returning to Jenner & Block this autumn, she served as Associate Deputy Attorney General at the US Department of Justice.
