Jenner & Block tops The National Law Journal's 2023 LGBTQ Scorecard for the second year in a row, with just over 12 percent of our legal employees self-reporting on the LGBTQ spectrum.

The National Law Journal's profile on the firm features Washington, DC Office Managing Partner Lindsay Harrison, who discussed the firm's US Supreme Court win in 2003 in Lawrence v. Texas and how LGBTQ issues were part of the firm's fabric long before the landmark case.

"We had multiple gay partners at the time, and it was still illegal for LGBTQ people to have sexual relations in about 13 states," Lindsay said of the legal fight, led by Lambda Legal's then-Legal Director Ruth Harlow, to end such prohibitions.

The firm continues to be a welcoming and inclusive environment for members of the LGBTQ community. Lindsay explained that Jenner will "gladly take all the young and talented lawyers who are seeking an environment that is more welcoming." She described the "tough hiring market" and hopes for "young LGBTQ lawyers to have as many choices as possible."

Jenner & Block has continuously been in the top five since the launch of the NLJ LGBTQ Scorecard.
