

“Applying Miranda’s Public Safety Exception to Dzhokhar Tsarnaev: Restricting Criminal Procedure Rights by Expanding Judicial Exceptions,” Columbia Law Review Sidebar, 2013

Publications

2013

In this essay, Partner Joanna Wright explores the expansion of judicially created exceptions to criminal procedure rights and legislation eliminating criminal procedure rights for certain groups of people or for all people in certain situations. As a backdrop of her examination, she harkens to the arrest of the surviving suspect in the 2013 Boston Marathon Bombing, a case that spurred a vigorous debate over his constitutional rights.
