Andy’s profile highlights his success securing a $46.7 million verdict on behalf of Universal Music Group, Sony Music Entertainment, and Warner Records from Grande Communications Network LLC. At issue was Grande’s failure to address the massive pirating of copyrighted recordings by its users. Andy says that a surprising part of his job is “how much success is based on listening and adapting.” He also says if he wasn’t a lawyer he would be “involved in music in some way.”

Alison’s profile highlights her work for industry-leading media and entertainment companies on issues related to new forms of piracy. Her profile also highlights her work helping clients navigate the myriad issues implicated by generative AI and other emerging technologies including copyright and other intellectual property questions to “leverage their valuable content” and “seize opportunities connected with those technologies so clients remain competitive,” says Stein. When she needs extra motivation, Alison says she thinks about her mother, “who is an inspirational trailblazer.”
