By: Anand Viswanathan

In this article, Special Counsel Anand Viswanathan examines what the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) calls its most significant set of interconnection reforms in two decades: Order No. 2023. Order No. 2023 is designed to ensure that generation resources can connect to the grid in a timely and efficient manner. As Anand explains, this long-awaited rule directs all public utility transmission providers to revise their pro forma generator interconnection queue rules. Anand provides background about the rule, outlines its key elements, and explores lingering questions.
