Randy, also the firm's Co-Managing Partner, pointed out the broad experience of Jenner's energy lawyers – including former US Supreme Court clerks, FERC and state regulators, and C-suite executives in energy utilities. “We've been in the shoes of the regulator, and we also have several people who have worked inside the big companies,” Randy said. “So we understand what our clients are experiencing and how they think about it.”

Suedeem said, “This is a time of unprecedented investment in the industry, which is reshaping the energy economy. It's driving new technology...and expanding the types of businesses that are now moving into the energy economy.”

The changing nature of the energy industry is driving the growth of the firm's Energy Practice, which recently welcomed Partners John Estes and Niqui Kohli and Special Counsel Anand Viswanathan and Will Barksdale.
