When asked how healthcare providers can avoid being fined over hacked data, Shoba told the publication that, “companies will have to balance meeting state and federal regulatory breach notification obligations with quickly informing patients with accurate information about what data was affected.”

Shoba is a former federal prosecutor and dynamic trial lawyer who leads complex and high-stakes internal and government-facing investigations, advises clients on mitigating and responding to cybersecurity risks, and provides advice and guidance on developing robust regulatory compliance programs. She is a Co-Chair of the firm’s National Security and Crisis Practice.
