Partner Precious Jacobs-Perry was admitted to the US Supreme Court bar alongside 11 other lawyers from the Black Women Lawyers Association of Greater Chicago (BWLA), a professional bar association committed to supporting and empowering Black women in the legal profession. Cook County Judge Chloe Pedersen moved for their admission, marking the first time BWLA has been admitted as a group. Admission qualifies lawyers to argue before the highest court in the nation, which shapes US law and policy. It is also a testament to their dedication and contribution to the legal profession.

Precious defends clients against large breach of contract and consumer class actions in the technology, energy, food and beverage, and financial services industries. Clients hire her for the sage counsel that she brings to evaluating and advising on business strategy that guides any pending or potential litigation.
