By: Joseph Torres, Alexis Bates

In an article for Employee Relations Law Journal, Partner Joseph Torres and Associates Alexis Bates and Amanda Walsh examine how excessive fee litigation is aiming for employer-sponsored prescription drug benefit plans. The authors discuss Employee Retirement Income Security Act and the principles that retirement plan fiduciaries must uphold, the beginnings and recent developments in excessive fee litigation, alleging excessive prescription drug fees, and more.

“Group health plan fiduciaries should prepare now for this new wave of excessive fee litigation,” the authors write. “This preparation will not only ensure that plan participants and beneficiaries reap the benefits of these plans, but also may prevent costly and time-consuming litigation over these fiduciary responsibilities.”
