A few of David’s cases include an antitrust case for the Las Vegas Review-Journal, which has been pending since 2019, a trade secrets lawsuit, and a content moderation case where he is representing Apple. David is also advising several clients on copyright issues related to artificial intelligence.

When asked about the key characteristics that make a successful IP lawyer/practitioner, David said, “Knowing the industry and business as well as you know the law. IP lawyers need to zoom out and understand the content and its place in the client’s business before we can effectively advise on the law.”
