By: Rob Dalling, Abi Dore

In a recent article for the New Law Journal, Partner Robert Dalling and Associate Abigail Dore highlight an urgent call to action for digital platforms: improve protections for children or risk potential fines. The Information Commissioner’s Office has called on 11 social media and video-sharing platforms to improve their privacy measures for young users, amid growing concerns about inadequate privacy protections in digital spaces.

This article explores the Children’s Code and Children’s code Strategy and discusses the potential impact on social media and video sharing platforms.
