Compared to other jurisdictions, the UK has been slow to develop a route map for commencing & managing securities claims. Partner Christian Tuddenham and Special Counsel Clare Hennessey explain why in a recent article published by New Law Journal titled, “Securities Litigation: where are we now?”

Christian advises financial institutions and companies worldwide in connection with complex litigation and arbitration, including securities litigation, civil fraud and economic tort claims, restructuring and contentious insolvency situations, shareholder and joint venture disputes, and asset-tracing and enforcement matters. Christian has particular experience managing disputes in emerging and frontier markets, including throughout the Middle East, India, Pakistan, Russia and the CIS.

Clare’s practice focuses on the resolution of complex commercial disputes via litigation in the English courts. Her broad experience includes advising clients in relation to complex civil fraud, breaches of contract and warranty, shareholder and joint venture disputes, professional negligence, and competition and regulatory investigations, in sectors including finance, energy, construction, automotive, telecommunications, and professional services. She also has particular experience in cartel damages actions before the Competition Appeal Tribunal.
