

Emily Loeb Sits Down with Law360 to Discuss What the GOP Sweep Will Mean for Congressional Investigations

Publications

December 3, 2024

Private sector oversight by lawmakers of both political parties has increased in recent years and congressional investigations practitioners expect this trend to continue with the incoming 119th Congress. In a recent interview with Law360, Jenner Congressional Investigation's Chair Emily Loeb highlights the potential for coordinated investigations between congressional committees and the executive branch given the upcoming unified control of government.

She observed that this can lead “to difficult situations where Congress [presses] for testimony from witnesses who are subject to ongoing law enforcement investigations by the executive branch or state AG's.”
