Overview

Liza is a litigator and strategic advisor who helps clients to navigate complex legal, regulatory, and business challenges. With experience as a White House policymaker, business and nonprofit advisor, and Supreme Court clerk, Liza combines sharp legal insight with a pragmatic business perspective.

Previously, Liza served as Director for International Economics at the White House National Security Council, where she counseled senior Biden Administration officials on clean energy, trade, and overseas investment. She began her career as a strategy consultant, helping governments, nonprofits, and philanthropies to solve urgent social and environmental problems.

A former Supreme Court and DC Circuit clerk, Liza graduated first in her class from Stanford Law School and holds an MBA from Stanford Graduate School of Business.
