Partner Christine Braamskamp was quoted in Bloomberg, American Banker, Law360, New Law Journal, and People Management on the FCA's upcoming rules addressing non-financial misconduct in the UK financial sector.

Christine highlights the challenges senior managers face under the new regime, stating that “the new rules on non-financial misconduct place a very significant burden on senior managers to take action in potentially nebulous circumstances in an era when cancel culture is rife,” and calls for “more clarity and examples to help firms understand their duties.”

With the FCA extending its reach to 37,000 firms by 2026, this marks a major shift in how culture and accountability are regulated across the industry.
