In a recent article for Accounting and Business, Partner Lucy Blake discussed the financial and legal risks that stem from companies' involvement in adverse environmental impacts, such as marine pollution.

“Companies that fail to identify, assess and transparently disclose their exposure to marine-related impacts may face legal challenges, consumer backlash and investor scrutiny,” said Lucy. “Brand value can be quickly eroded if a company is seen as contributing to marine degradation, either directly or via its supply chain.”

Lucy is Co-Chair of Human Rights and Global Strategy Practice at Jenner & Block in London. She helps clients prevent, investigate, respond to and recover from all manners of wrongdoing. This includes bribery, fraud, and money laundering as well as non-financial misconduct, including toxic workplace cultures, and “ESG” risks arising from human rights and climate impacts in companies' supply chains.
