The panel will explore the latest trends and developments in bank and fintech partnerships, offering best practices about partnership integration, responsibility setting, interfacing with regulators, and making course corrections. The discussion will provide insights into what banks and fintechs are looking for in new partners and how they face challenges in crypto, financial crime monitoring, and disputes over customer transactions.

Jeremy combines a long record of litigating disputes with extensive regulatory investigations experience. He helps clients navigate state and federal regulatory investigations, particularly in financial services, energy, public ethics and lobbying law.
