December 12, 2025

Partner Adam Unikowsky was recognized among Law360's 2025 Appellate MVPs for his US Supreme Court victory in February on behalf of unemployment claimants, a decisive Second Circuit panel majority win for Uber and Postmates in a proposed antitrust class action, and a key victory at the First Circuit in a challenge to a Rhode Island toll on tractor trailers.

The profile highlights Adam's work in Williams v. Reed, which he views as his biggest accomplishment of the last year. "That was a difficult case — a lot of complex, cross-cutting issues," he said.

In his profile, Adam also discussed his work with Artificial Intelligence and an experiment he ran to see if AI could make a better Supreme Court argument than him. He highlights how he input briefs and key precedents into AI platform Claude and posed questions the justices did.

"Given this transformational technology, one is very curious to try it out, because really no one knows its limits. The people who make it aren't lawyers, and they know in the abstract it can work on anything," he said. "But you really just have to try it out and explore what it can do, and no one knows until someone tries."
